A SLIVER OF HOPE? BARELY! Exclusive Interview with France Reveals All

French resolution claims to aid German people with idealistic ideas and baseless claims

By Summer Itaborai for Bild Germany

In discussion with the delegation of France, I was able to receive crucial information regarding their resolution. First, I questioned the overall purpose of this resolution as a whole: “The purpose…is to return peace in the upcoming years between all European countries.” Bold statement coming from the country who has incited this entire issue to begin with through their imposition of harsh clauses and extreme demands. However, I gave them the benefit of the doubt, inquiring further about the issues affecting the people of our nation. They have proposed the Allied Welfare Program, which will provide support for all European citizens living in detriment and poverty. While this implies the inclusion of German citizens, this was not officially confirmed.

Unfortunately, the baseless claims came to light once more when the delegation was questioned on why the Fatherland will continue to pay a significant portion of the reparations, with minimal assistance from Austria and Hungary and no assistance from the Ottomans and Bulgaria. Despite these nations also being a part of the Central Powers of the Great War, France believes that Germany is the most guilty, having conducted the most amount of “damage” to the continent.

While our nation played a significant role, it is hypocritical to essentially disregard the other involved countries.

The delegation also wished that this resolution would help to prevent a future war, but then failed to acknowledge the rising of extremist groups around the country: “With the AWP, there should be less resentment towards our resolution. We would like to punish these nations for escalating the war, but we recognize that there are innocent civilians who need our help.” An optimistic approach, slightly contradicted with the inability to comment on whether the co-submitting nations would be fully committed to aiding Germany in future crises.

We must remain strong, us German people, and never stop fighting for justice even in times of uncertainty and trouble.
